A UNIQUE IMPRESSION

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

A variety of articles was a staple of each publication of the Richfield Springs Mercury during its long history, some signed, others left to the reader's imagination as to who could have submitted them. These were not the regular news items from town, village and surrounding hamlets. They could cover any number of observations and were included in the other local publications that were produced during the summer season of visitors.

The following is a "tongue-in-cheek" observation that was published in 1889 in the Richfield News, usually a twenty-four page, nine by twelve issue, 'Devoted to the interest of American Summer Resorts' which was available every Sunday morning and could be purchased for the sum of ten cents or for one dollar for the season of twelve issues. The article was entitled:

"A Widow's Impressions of Richfield".

"Richfield is unique in certain of its attractions as a summer resort. Its healthfulness, charm of location, delightful drives, patronage of wealthy and distinguished guests and excellence of its springs for certain ills that flesh is heir to, have been so frequently mentioned in prose and verse that it seems unnecessary to recount them here.

There is however, a feature of these summer gatherings in Richfield which has not been dealt upon, particularly by the newspaper correspondents - the number of widows who come here season after season.

There is certainly a superfluity of the ladies whom some have been told to shun at the present time. At a fair calculation there are thirty-five widows now at the Springs. They are everywhere - to the right of you, to the left of you, at the readings, hops, dances, concerts, balls, at the races, fairs, musicals, donkey parties, bean parties, tea parties; on the piazzas, in the corridors, in the dining rooms and in the charming Spring House Park. You meet them when driving and walking, at the book store, at the Great White Sulphur Spring - in short - they are everywhere.

There are all kinds of widows; those who are in all 'the luxury of woe' with yards and yards of crepe shrouding their form and a little white border inside the brief bonnet which etiquette of mourning requires to give evidence that the dear departed, was the semper idem (always the same). Then there are the widows in half morning which are mixtures of white and black, or purples, that as one of them remarked are 'awfully becoming' and pretty. There are widows who have laid aside their weeds and have donned the brightest and liveliest colors of the rainbow in confections made by artists in feminine distractions.

There are widows of all ages, the venerable widow, dignified and sedate; the middle aged widow who chaperones her pretty daughters and talks of bank books and money investments; and the youngish (to coin a word) and young widows who are dreaded by the girls and married women as dangerous, their charms proving captivating to the lords of creation in general.

The gentle uplifting of her hair into a coil upon her pretty head; the turn of her neck, the arch of her brows over the half veiled eyes, the contour of her cheeks; her shapely arms and white hands; her coquetries of dress and conversation are, for some unknown reason, more attractive than the same graces would be in a maiden fair and free. Possibly it is her ease of manner, her self-pride and a certain graciousness, which comes from her experiences in life. At all events her whole ensemble is that of one of whom married and single women would say 'beware, take care'.

There is the literary widow too, the lady who discusses the topics of the hours in elegant and well chosen expression. She has traveled, seen good society, talks glibly of art and music and theology and is generally 'up' in intellectual developments. Her exact opposite in mental strength and culture, is the widow of whom it may be said, 'the things she does not know would fill a large volume'.

There are, of course, musical widows who talk Wagner and Weber (making the W. a V.). There are rich widows, who are laden with diamonds, pearls, rubies and gems of India and Africa and the poor little widow whose only outward adornment is a bouquet corsage of sweet peas and one or two rings on her dear little fingers.

There are at Richfield Springs, all widows: short widows, stout widows, thin widows, handsome widows, pretty widows, ugly widows and every imaginable style of widow to be found in these United States at the present time.

A widow gave a card party the other evening where all the guests were widows. Still another coterie of widows, after eulogizing their former partners, agreed without a dissenting voice, that being free to come and go and to follow their own sweet will, was a situation in life not to be despised, at least for a season or two.

Now the question is why do widows congregate here? Eligible partners are certainly in the minority - in other words, widowers and bachelors are scarce. The gentlemen who are here, it is noticed, hang together on the hotel piazzas as if there were safety in numbers. They play cards, go to the races and give their attention to manly sports. How Cruel!

From the accounts received from other American watering-places, there seems to be a superabundance of the fair sex this summer everywhere, and particularly of widows, so there is no hope in changing the scene. A woman may 'charm never so wisely' as well as she can in Richfield."
