CURE OR QUACKERY?

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

It was reported in a 1903 issue of The Mercury that a man from Herkimer sent the following testimonial to a patent medicine company: “Dear Sir - My wife took a bottle of your medicine and died. I am married again. Please send me another bottle!”

While we now have laws helping to regulate the abuse and unethical practices of the use of pharmaceuticals, this wasn’t the case in the 1800s to mid 1900s before patent medicines became the subject of public and government scrutiny.

Commonly known as patent medicines, proprietary medicines or nostrums (Latin meaning ‘our remedy’), few if any of the medicines were patented. This identifying phrase comes from the late 17th century when royalty issued letters patent authorizing the use of royal endorsement for advertising purposes. Chemical patents weren’t necessary in the United States until 1925. If patents had been required, the disclosure of ingredients would have been necessary to the public - something that promoters wanted to avoid.

Some patent medicines actually did deliver the promised results but with very dangerous ingredients. For example, medicines advertised as soothers for infants contained opium. Many others offered to the public contained grain alcohol. Addiction was a big problem and when this situation became well known, advertising changed to stating that there were no harmful effects from the products, regardless of what they contained.

Patent medicines were supposedly able to cure just about anything and everything. Take, for example, the trade card that was handed out by A. J. Smith & Son, (Alfred 1815-1911 and Willard 1849-1926) one of several pharmacists who were at Richfield Springs. This card told of the great curative powers of Dr. Jayne’s Tonic Vermifuge: “The Best Tonic for grown persons and children. Safe, Effective and Reasonable in Price. In Dyspepsia, a disease from which so many adults suffer and the prominent symptoms of which are - a variable appetite, heartburn, oppression and soreness of the stomach, low spirits, sick headache, fever and languor, this Tonic is really invaluable. It should be taken in small doses after each meal, using in connection the Sanative Pills when needed, as per directions. So also when used for Worms in children, this Vermifuge is exceedingly useful. The presence of these dreadful pests, which prey on the delicate systems of the young until, through irritation and general debility, their constitutions are broken down - may be known by a capricious appetite, craving of strange articles, weakness of the bowels, swelling of the abdomen, fevers, sallow complexion, fitful sleep, grinding of teeth, picking of the nose, flushed cheeks, twitchings and a wasting away. The Vermifuge should be used according to directions, remembering that it will not only destroy worms, but by reason of its excellent tonic powers, (possessed by no other worm medicine) the proper action of the stomach will be restored and the general health re-established. It will also be found of much value for Fever and Ague in children. For Summer Complaints of either adults or children such as Colic, Cramps, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhea and Dysentery, Dr. Jayne’s Carminative Balsam is the SUREST CURATIVE KNOWN. No family or traveler should be without it as by its prompt use, much suffering and many lives may be saved.”

Dr. Jayne & Son’s company in Philadelphia was one of the first patent medicine companies to use an annual almanac as a marketing tool. Their first one was printed in 1843 and the tradition continued for the next ninety years. It provided a guide to the variety of medicinal offerings by the company including the Tonic Vermifuge, Sanative Pills, Alterative (the ad for which said it would cure twenty-five different ailments), Hair Tonic, Ague Mixture and Expectorants. Elaborate engraved images were produced to help those who might be illiterate to be sure to see and understand what was being offered. Detailed descriptions produced in ads and trade cards went to all druggists for the more educated. His efforts made Dr. Jayne one of the wealthiest men of his time.

All druggists of that era offered a wide variety of patent medications for sale, some even produced locally. In 1922, when the New York State Pharmaceutical Conference was again held at Bloomfield’s Hotel, it included attendees from the world of pharmacy, chemistry, representatives from large drug houses and traveling drug, cosmetic and patent medicine salesmen. Richfield, of course, had its share of traveling salesmen who checked out the local stores to see how the products they were promoting sold and if they were prominently displayed.

The Mercury printed long lists, at the request of manufacturers, of testimonials that described their latest products curing all sorts of ailments. Most of the illnesses that they claimed were cured, were self-diagnosed and probably had nothing to do with the ailment that the person might have had.

The muckrakers, reform minded journalists in what was called ‘The Progressive Era in the United States (1890-1920), claimed to expose corruption including that of the production of unregulated medications. This caused some conflict as the newspapers and magazines of that time relied on the income from the advertising of these medicines. The Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906 did not ban the alcohol, narcotics, or other stimulants in the medicines but required them to be labeled as such and stopped some of the more misleading or fraudulent claims that appeared on the labels. In 1936 this act was revised to ban such products. Advertisers thereafter were careful not to make great medical claims and often had a disclaimer that the products had not been thoroughly tested.

Some of the non-prescription products that are currently offered, stem from the patent medicine era but their ingredients have been revised. Perhaps you have used Vick’s VapoRub, Geritol or Smith Brother’s Throat Drops, among others?

Whether containing a placebo or possibly having some healing properties, the use of patent medications served as a self-medicating form of health care. Americans during the mid-nineteenth century into the first two decades of the twentieth century, knew very little about the human body and looked for quick solutions for medical problems that they really didn’t understand. Doctors were few and far between, especially in the rural areas, and not everyone could afford them. Hospitals at the time, were considered places where people went to die.

How fortunate we are that we live in a liminal age where we are involved in the amazing progress of the medical field.

Houseplant Tip

It's important to watch houseplants closely. According to gardenguides.com, an online gardening resource, you should inspect plants regularly for yellowing or discolored leaves. This condition is usually caused by overwatering, but can also be the result of insects. Deformed plants and sticky deposits on leaves and stems can be caused by insects as well.
